A Scientific Experiment

By WILLARD BLAKEMAN

When the Franco-Prussian war broke out Edward Penton, a young American medical student who, on account of youth, had escaped being either killed by ammunition or disease in the great struggle that had ended five years before in his own country, went to Germany and through the influence of the American minister was accepted as assistant surgeon with rank of lieuten-

After the battle of Gravelotte, when all the medical staff was most needed, word was brought to Dr. Snedicker, medical director of the Prussian army, that the American had deliberately in-Miss Mary Ewen of Hale street, who sulted a medical officer of his own has been spending the past two weeks rank and that a duel was to be fought at Vergennes, returned to this city tobetween the two.

"This is very wrong," exclaimed the doctor with a scowl. "These two young men may both be disabled, and we have not now enough physicians to take care of the wounded."

"And yet, doctor, the challenge having passed, there is no way out of it Both would have to leave the army if they did not fight." "They don't fight duels in America."

said Dr. Snedicker. "Send this American to me." Penton reported, and the doctor endeavored to persuade him to apologize.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, doctor," Penton replied. "I'll agree to fire an imaginary shot at him, and if he is not killed at the first fire I will apologize to him."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Permit the duel on the following terms: Make two tablets, both harmless. Announce that one contains a deadly poison. The principals each choose a tablet. Convince my opponent, Lieutenant Berkhalter, that he has chosen the poisoned one."

"If that will satisfy you, proceed." As soon as the wounded were at least temporarily provided for Dr. Snedicker called a number of medical officers into his tent and, last of all, the participants of the duel. He showed them two pellets exactly alike in appearance, announcing that one was harmless while the other contained prussic acid. The one containing the poison would have the taste of the kernel of peach stones. "And now, gentlemen," concluded the doctor, "choose. It is better for this army to have one live surgeon than two disabled ones."

Berkhalter bravely stepped up to his superior, put his hand into a glass tumbler and took out one of two tablets. Penton took the remaining one Then at a word from the commander each put his tablet in his mouth. An officer handed each a glass of water. der to make sure that he had swallowed his dose.

quick. The poison acts at once." "I have only to say that I propose to die as an officer of the Prussian army should," replied the plucky doctor. At the same time he felt his legs giving way under him, and he sank into the arms of his second, who carried him to an army cot and laid him upon it. Penton went to him and of fered him his hand, "I envy you," he said, "your opportunity to show your bravery. I would not have you die without withdrawing the offensive words I spoke to you." But Berkhalter had passed into unconsciousness.

"Are you satisfied?" asked Dr. Snedicker to Penton.

"Wait a moment. His imagination cannot act while he is unconscious. He will revive presently."

Snedicker was disposed to put an end to the matter before it should be too late, but a German is nothing if not an investigator, and he was content to grant the request on the ground of science.

Presently Berkhalter opened his eyes; but, seeing a group of officers standing over him, watching him die, he closed them again.

One of the medical men present went to the cot and placed his hand on Berkhalter's heart, then looked anxiously at the American.

"A few minutes," he said, "will place him beyond the pale of revival." Penton whipped a vial from his pocket and, removing the stopper, held it under his antagonist's nose. Berkhalter again opened his eyes. "Tell him." said Penton and immediately left the tent. "Doctor," said Snedicker, "you have not swallowed poison. The duel has been turned into a scientific demonstration. Neither tablet contained poison.' "Where is the cursed American?" cried Berkhalter, standing erect. "1 shall kill him!"

"Here is a written apology." "I want no apology. I shall kill"-A corporal came in, but Berkhalter had no mind to be handled by an enlisted man and subsided. Penton received a warning from his commander that he had better keep out of his late opponent's way if he didn't wish to die a violent death. Instead of doing so, the next time he saw his enemy he approached him with outstretched hand.

"These Americans." said Berkhalter. "have no sentiment."
